

Ob, Gyn & RS Celebrating Our Latinx Community

Gabriela Negrete, Clinical Research Coordinator , SOLARS (PTBi)

Mexican, California born and raised

Orgullo Latino

One thing I truly love about the Latinx culture is the way the community is both cherished and celebrated. Times where there are constant political, environmental, and social threats, whether it be thought mutual aid or conjugation(virtual or 6 ft apart), the community is always there. It is something that I have grown to cherish and admire at a much deeper level which has been beautiful. I will be sharing with my future littles and community.

My WHY

I do this work because I love helping the community. Like I previously stated, for a big part of our lives we are told that we can/should do it alone but far from the truth. Being in community and seeing the resilience, love, and the want to help others is something that makes me realize I am nothing without community. Being in this space challenges me every day and gives me the opportunities to be part of that change we wish to see.

Mis Pasiones

As I walk each day remembering the privilege I have as a Latinx, I am committed to learning new behaviors and unlearning behavior that has been harmful and books have given me that space outside of the community. Highlighting the importance of centering and uplifting Black voices...always, the priority to show up for the Black community and the gravity to address anti-Blackness and bias in our own communities as we too perpetuate these systems. NoName Book Club highlights two books each month written by authors of color. NoName Book Club nonamebooks.com , Twitter @NonameBooks